

the 1990s, the number of people with a diagnosis of schizophrenia has increased in many countries (Murray & Lopez, 1996).

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the lives of people with schizophrenia. The World Health Organization (WHO) has developed a strategy for the care of people with schizophrenia, which is based on the following principles: (1) early diagnosis and treatment; (2) continuity of care; (3) a focus on the individual's needs; and (4) a focus on the individual's strengths (WHO, 1993).

The WHO strategy is based on the idea that people with schizophrenia should be treated as individuals, rather than as a group. This means that the treatment should be tailored to the individual's needs and strengths. The WHO strategy also emphasizes the importance of social support and rehabilitation for people with schizophrenia.

The WHO strategy is based on the idea that people with schizophrenia should be treated as individuals, rather than as a group. This means that the treatment should be tailored to the individual's needs and strengths. The WHO strategy also emphasizes the importance of social support and rehabilitation for people with schizophrenia.

The WHO strategy is based on the idea that people with schizophrenia should be treated as individuals, rather than as a group. This means that the treatment should be tailored to the individual's needs and strengths. The WHO strategy also emphasizes the importance of social support and rehabilitation for people with schizophrenia.

The WHO strategy is based on the idea that people with schizophrenia should be treated as individuals, rather than as a group. This means that the treatment should be tailored to the individual's needs and strengths. The WHO strategy also emphasizes the importance of social support and rehabilitation for people with schizophrenia.

The WHO strategy is based on the idea that people with schizophrenia should be treated as individuals, rather than as a group. This means that the treatment should be tailored to the individual's needs and strengths. The WHO strategy also emphasizes the importance of social support and rehabilitation for people with schizophrenia.

The WHO strategy is based on the idea that people with schizophrenia should be treated as individuals, rather than as a group. This means that the treatment should be tailored to the individual's needs and strengths. The WHO strategy also emphasizes the importance of social support and rehabilitation for people with schizophrenia.

The WHO strategy is based on the idea that people with schizophrenia should be treated as individuals, rather than as a group. This means that the treatment should be tailored to the individual's needs and strengths. The WHO strategy also emphasizes the importance of social support and rehabilitation for people with schizophrenia.

The WHO strategy is based on the idea that people with schizophrenia should be treated as individuals, rather than as a group. This means that the treatment should be tailored to the individual's needs and strengths. The WHO strategy also emphasizes the importance of social support and rehabilitation for people with schizophrenia.